

Why People Wear Perfumes and other Fragrances

Scented oils, perfumes and other fragrances have been adorned by people because early civilization. Today, perfumes can be found all around, from scented candles, to all your favorite bath and body products. There are numerous reasons why people wear perfumes, but eventually it boils down to the fact that they make us feel happy. The reason we feel happy is heavily dependent on the individual, but can range from the presence of pheromones, memories the aroma invokes, a feeling of escape, and also the ability to show individuality through fragrances.

First, Pheromones are scent triggered the body's hormones which usually stimulate sexual appetite. Logically this hormone plays an important role in human sexuality and desire. Analogs of the normal human hormonal can be found in some perfumes where these aromas trigger increased sexual appetite. The list of known pheromones is growing continuously. Though, most of the currently recognized pheromones only work on men. As such, women wearing most of these perfumes instill greater sexual desire in the men encircling all of them, and in return, boosting her own self-esteem as her feelings of being attractive and adorned grow. This, certainly, makes any woman feel happy. However, though pheromones influence our sexuality, the results are fleeting. Consequently, their presence in a perfume plays a secondary role in order to some other reasons why we put on perfumes.

Second, There is a Strong Relationship Between Perfumes and Memory

For instance, we might be somewhere shopping and smell something from a nearby bakery that reminds us of something our Mother made for us when we wherever little - like chocolaty brownies, or a homemade raspberry pie. Next, we find a perfume or product that smells like chocolate and raspberries and instantly feel at home with that fragrance. The same goes for hundreds of other scents out there that connects us together with warm, positive reminiscences - such as the smell of a husband's or boyfriend's cologne upon their sweater, the smell of particular holidays, the smell of rain or snow, and so on. Connecting ourselves to these memories through easily obtainable fragrances causes us to be happy.
